Recently I read all the way through Gregory Boyd's "God of the Possible" and Bruce Ware's "God's Lesser Glory" which are now the two most important arguments for opposing viewpoints in this debate within contemporary evangelism over the nature and extend of God's sovereignty and knowledge. Boyd's "God of the Possible" is actually quite a bit better than Pinnock's "The Openness of God."

In short, then, both the undiminished glory of God and the unqualified good of Christians are at stake in this new and deeply flawed vision of God and the Christian life known as open theism. For the sake of God's greater glory, we must take seriously the argumentation offered by open theists — lest the church be led, with them, to affirm this God of lesser glory.
